- 1 In the circuit diagram shown in Fig. 1.1, the brightness of the lamp can be controlled by the variable resistor.

Fig. 1.1

- (a) Name components B and C.

- (b) Redraw the circuit diagram to show how you would include an ammeter in the circuit to measure the current flowing through the lamp.

[2]

- (c) State the unit in which electric current is measured.

- 2 A student investigated the activity of the enzyme catalase, which is present in all living tissues. This enzyme catalyses the break-down of hydrogen peroxide to water and oxygen.

She put equal volumes of hydrogen peroxide into two small flasks. She took two pieces of fresh liver of equal mass, and cut one of them into small pieces. Then she placed each flask onto a balance and added the whole piece of liver to one flask and the small pieces of liver to the other. She read the mass of each flask every 30 seconds for five minutes. Fig. 2.1 shows her results.

Fig. 2.1

- (a) Use the word equation above to explain why the mass of each flask and its contents decreased.

.....

- (b) Explain why the mass of one flask and its contents decreased more rapidly than the other.

.....

- (c) Predict the results that would be obtained if the liver was placed in boiling water for a few minutes before adding it to hydrogen peroxide. Explain your prediction.

- 3 Fig. 3.1 shows four sets of apparatus P, Q, R and S which are used to separate mixtures. The diagrams are not drawn to scale.

Fig. 3.1

- (a) State which apparatus, P, Q, R or S is normally used to separate
- the solid from a solid dissolved in a liquid,
- the solid from an insoluble solid suspended in a liquid,
- three differently coloured solids dissolved in a liquid. [3]
- (b) (i) Which of the diagrams P, Q, R or S in Fig. 3.1 shows apparatus used for fractional distillation?
-[1]
- (ii) Explain why fractional distillation is an important process in the oil industry.

- 5 Fig. 5.1 shows a plant.

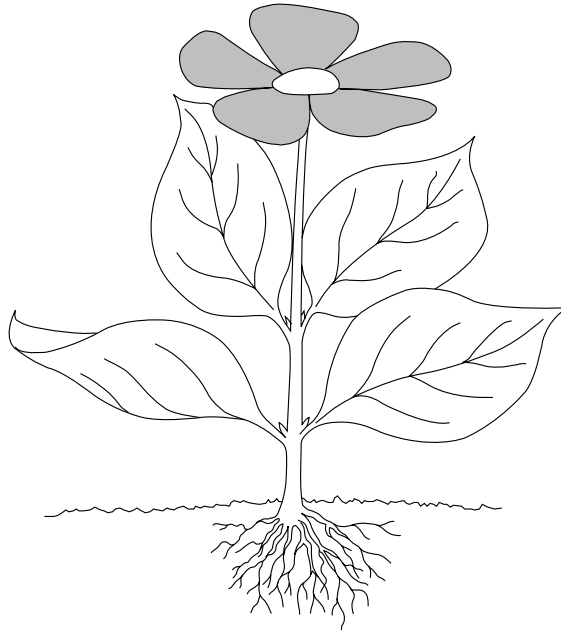

Fig. 5.1

- (a) On Fig. 5.1, draw a label line to each of the following parts, and label each one with the appropriate letter.

P a place where water enters the plant.

Q the part of the plant that is responsible for sexual reproduction. [2]

- (b) The palisade cells in the leaves of the plant are responsible for photosynthesis. In photosynthesis, energy from sunlight is used to make carbon dioxide and water react together to produce glucose and oxygen.

(i) Name the substance, present in the palisade cells, that traps sunlight energy.

.....[1]

(ii) Describe what happens to the glucose if the plant makes more than it immediately needs.

- (c) A leafy shoot was cut from a plant, and placed with its cut end in a solution of a red dye. After an hour, red lines could be seen in the leaves.

Explain how this happened.
